General Information

Club Background

Rappahannock River Retriever Club, Inc., (RRRC) is a 501(c)(3) non-profit, non-stock Virginia corporation whose roots trace back to a small group of waterfowl enthusiasts who in 1997 joined together to encourage proper dog training and conservation of game. The rapidly growing club has recently enjoyed a membership surge from both hunters eager to try hunt tests and novices eager to train their retrievers.

Members come from all over Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania as well as the District of Columbia. By a special arrangement with Shady Grove proprietor Neil Selby, the Club has headquarters and training grounds at his Shady Grove Kennel & Hunting Preserve, which is located south of Warrenton near Remington. Members generally meet the first Saturday of the month for the months of March through August, and the first Sunday in the month for the months of September through February. Realistic hunt-test scenarios are set up for dogs and handlers to practice from master level on down to puppy retrieves.

The RRRC welcomes novice and experienced hunters and hunt-test competitors alike. Any breed that will retrieve and age of dog is welcome, be it pups just starting out to Master and field trial hopefuls. Members' dogs, in addition to black, yellow and chocolate Labradors, include many Chesapeake Bay and Golden Retrievers. We also have Pointers, Boykin, Springer, and Cocker spaniels, and Nova Scotia Duck Tolling retrievers. Members include both professionals--breeders and trainers--as well as serious amateurs, novices and judges. Everyone takes turns setting up and being "bird boys." Training sessions in nice weather frequently include picnic lunches. Flyers are used at most sessions, and every dog gets a chance to practice at its skill level.

Rappahannock River Retriever Club, Inc. holds hunt tests in all 3 major venues--AKC, HRC and NAHRA. RRRC is also a member of the Master National Club. While RRRC hosted NAHRA licensed field tests in March 2003 and October 2004, a double HRC hunt test was held in September 2005. Since the very successful hosting of our first AKC-licensed hunt test in April 2004 at Shady Grove, RRRC has become a major venue of retriever training and testing, hosting AKC-licensed hunting tests again in April 2005, and in December 2005, where double Junior, double Senior, and double master tests are offered.

In addition to offering various hunt tests or field tests, RRRC also actively supports the education of its participants through various judges' clinics and through supporting apprentice judges at licensed events.

If you are interested in running your retriever in any of the various testing formats, or are interested in learning more about these events, volunteering is a fantastic way to see the action first hand and to learn more about making your retriever the best that he or she can be. Our next scheduled event is but a few months away so make plans now to volunteer to help!

RRRC is indeed very excited and honored to have been selected to host 2007 Master National Retriever Trial. With such a prestigious test being so close at hand, all interested individuals are encouraged to start making plans today to attend this most special event.

We welcome all guests to join us for a training day and evaluate our great club. Please bring your dog, a leash, water and lunch. You will be expected to "work" in the field throwing birds for other dogs. We would love to meet you!

On a typical training session, the club will offer single, double, and triple marks as well as blind retrieves that are arranged, conducted and at distances similar to what is encountered at both NAHRA field tests and AKC hunt tests. Not only are individuals encouraged to ask for set-ups that allow them to more fully test or evaluate their dog's ability on certain issues or concepts, but members are also encouraged to take turns setting up a given training session so that they can tailor-make a session.

Besides offering retrievers a variety of marking and handling tests, the training sessions also afford handlers and dogs alike an opportunity to become familiar with the sights, sounds, and excitement of a hunting test or field test so that they will be better able to perform at their best when the real test takes place, should one wish to show their retriever.

Training a retriever, like most things in life, does not happen all on its own- it takes an investment of effort, patience, consistency, and last but certainly not least, an investment of time. Greater levels of proficiency at retrieving understandably require different concepts to be taught, as well as more of an investment in time and effort. Individuals are encouraged have a goal of proficiency in mind that they wish their retriever to attain, to develop a training schedule that will allow for the goal to be reached, and to then train with that goal in mind. Just as people have different personalities, cognitive prowess, and physical attributes, so to do retrievers. Accordingly, one needs to remain flexible to modifying their training regimen to the particular needs of their retriever. A concept may seem to be quite simplistic to you, however, if your retriever does not understand, it really doesn't matter what you think as your retriever does not understand what is being asked. Be willing to take a step or two backwards in your training before you advance to the next phase or concept. By adapting your training regimen to the needs of your retriever, you will be better able to reach the goal together and both you and your retriever will be able to find the pleasure, if not joy, of working together as a team.
